

Article

Maintenance of Native-like Protein Dynamics May Not Be Required for Engineering Functional Proteins

Sophie M.C. Gobeil^{1, 2}, Christopher M. Clouthier^{1, 3}, Jaeok Park^{1, 4, 5}, Donald Gagné^{1, 5, 6}, Albert M. Berghuis^{1, 4, 5}, Nicolas Doucet^{1, 5, 6}, Joelle N. Pelletier^{1, 2, 3, 7}

+ Show more

<https://doi.org/10.1016/j.chembiol.2014.07.016>

Get rights and content

Under an Elsevier user license

Referred to by Nobuhiko Tokuriki, Colin J. Jackson
Enzyme Dynamics and Engineering: One Step at a Time
Chemistry & Biology, Volume 21, Issue 10, 23 October 2014, Pages 1259-1260
 PDF (298 K)

Open Archive

Highlights

- Natural homologs conserve very limited millisecond dynamics
- A laboratory-evolved chimera tolerates dynamic variation on the catalytic timescale
- An underlying potential for flexibility may promote evolvability of function
- Conservation of native-like dynamics is not essential when engineering enzymes